MASTER WEAVERS VILLAGE

Master weavers from the Meher community preserve the great legacy of Sambalpuri handloom weaving in Jhiliminda village, Bargarh district, Odisha. This elaborate technique requires a careful procedure called as Baandha, in which threads are tie-dyed to produce bright patterns before weaving. The method starts with selecting fine cotton or silk yarns, which are then tied in precise patterns to prevent dye absorption. Following dyeing, the yarns are painstakingly woven on handlooms to create the finished cloth. This labor-intensive approach necessitates exceptional expertise and might take several months and even several years to finish a single saree, depending on the complexity of the design. In Jhiliminda, a self-help group of 13 master weavers works together to create one-of-a-kind handloom products such as sarees, shirts, and bed covers. These artists frequently sell their creations through local agents or cooperatives such as Sambalpuri Bastralaya, which assist promote and distribute the products to a larger audience. Despite problems such as competition from machine-made textiles and restricted access to contemporary materials, Jhiliminda weavers remain committed to preserving their ancient skill, making substantial contributions to the region's cultural and economic fabric.
